ALEXA.GAZETTE & VIRGINIA ADVERTISER PUBLISHED DAILY BY

EDGAR SNOWDEN. Governor Tilden. Gov. Tilden presents a unique picture as he stands there in his magnificent home listening to the effusive outpouriogs of his enthusiastic followers. He is a man whose modest, unobtrusive personality is in singular contrast with the worship which he receives from men who tower above him in stature, and whose dress and manners are so infinitely more pretentious and assertive than his. There stands the un-pretentious man-Mr. Tilden looks smaller than he really is by reason of his stooping carriage—with his small, smooth, boyish, round head bent, with that sleepy droop in the left evolid which is undoubtedly caused, at least partially, by prosis, with his smooth and his small, delicate, utterly unobtrusive features, dressed with a plainness which the pettiest clerk of a fashionable dry goods store would despise-there stands this man, apparently so weak, so mild, so selfless, so uncombacive, and yet around him crowd the colessal Gwin, the burly Willis, the statuesque Wood, the pompous Ward, the majestic Wickham, the great and pretentious men of the purty, and bow before the modest, quiet little man with the cold, passionless, sagacious face. It reminds one of little Napoleon receiving the homage of Soult, Bernadotte, Murat and all his great generals. Tilden's face, however, has none of the wonderful imperiousness of Napo con-it is one of the most unobtrusive, gentle, harmless faces you could pick out in a crowd. His clear blue eyes are somewhat paled by age; his complexion, though tolerably fresh for a man of his age, does still betray the wear of study and mental labor, and the wrinkles round his eyes deepen the impression of a character formed by a severe strain of intellectual activity during a busy life. The pleasantest part of Mr. Tilden's face, as he stands there listening to his friends, is his mouth-a pleasant, small mouth, utterly wanting in sensual warmth, tut indicative of much decision and firmness. the pose, too, which is small, thin, but with an inclination to a bulge at the end, is firm y and clearly drawn, and the expression of the entire face has more of this character of firmness than of anything else. It has been said that Gov. Tilden's individuality is all absorbing in all his relations of life, that he towers over all his associates and advisers, and shapes his policy to suit himself and nobody else. There is certainly no indication of this in his appearance, which is that of a man who cares but fittle for self. Yesterday Mr. Tilden was, in addition, rather in a mood of abstraction. It is naturally somewhat tiresome for a man who stands on the very brink of the Presidency, within an inch of the great ambition of an arduous life, and also within an inch at the same time of ruinous defeat, to have to entertain an increasing stream of visitors-many of them ectire strangers into the bargain-whose main object is to have a good stare at him and to shake his already aching hand. While listening to these people, and doing so in an attitude of patience and resignation, if not of cheerfulness, he was evidently cogitating over the great result shaping itself now among the everglades of Florida. But Mr. Tilden has wonderful selfcontrol, and his severe mental training enabled him to entertain all, these visitors and send them away satisfied even while his mind was ed as beyond all doubt. The ring of the bell is always answered by a man servant-either by an imposing butler, who looks like a church warden or bishop in his tremendous dignity and exquisite attire, or by a younger lackey, who is also good looking and lashionable enough for a Fifth avenue beau. Both these functionaries are much more elaborately attired than Governor Tilden, whose dress, while neat and natty almost to old maidish scrupulousness, is always simplicity itself. One quality of these functionaries which at once ingratiates them in the visitor's heart is their candor. If you ask, "Is Governor Tilden in?" there is no "I'll see" or "I don't know" about them, but with praiseworthy cauder they either inform you that he is in or that he is not, and if he is they will freely and frankly let you know whether the Governor is willing or busy with figures of electoral majorities. B - mental absorption, little that was unusual was unwilling to see you. The hall is wide and high and the coat rack is inveriably strewn with coats and hats-for when could you ever call at Governor Tilden's house without fieding a host of visitors? To the right is the parlor, which is spacious, and the furnture of which, if not rich or sumptuous, is certainly tasteful and elegant. The carpet, although of expensive fabric, is not nearly so gorgeous as in the houses of most wealthy shoddyites, and there is a general air of elegant simplicity about the whole. The chairs are large, easy, cosey, and the table and bookcase soon woo your presence by their stores of mag-nificent art publications. The vases, the brica-brae, the minor ornaments are all in keeping with the simplicity of the furniture. The woodwork is very fine, not only in the parlor but about the whole house.

Back of the parlor is a middle room, which is usually not open, and then we come upon the dining room in the rear, which is very spacious, extending, as it does, the whole width of the house. Here Governor Tilden entertains nearly every day a party of his friends at dinner. Governor Tilden still adheres to the old-fashioned custom of dining in the middle of the day and taking a simple "tea" in the evening for supper. In the southeast corner of this room there is now a telegraphic apparatus, and here the Governor may be seen all day receiving the very latest information from Mr. Hewitt and Colonel Pelton, at the Everett House committee rooms, with which Governor Tilden stands thus in instantaneous and easy communication. While one of the Governor's reasonai secretaries-generally Mr. Smith-operates the instrument the Governor stands patiently by or paces the floor until the result is announced.

Upstairs are the Governor's study, his bedroom, and also Col. Pelton's apartments and those of his mother, Mrs. Pelton, the Governor s sister, a very amiable lady, well known in New York society, who presides over the Governor's mansion, and who will also be the mistress of the White House when Governor Tilden takes his seat. It will thus be seen that Covernor Tilden's is, after all, not a thorough bachelor's establishment. His numerous relatives, who often visit him and his sister, explain the fact that often when the writer has been there he has heard the merry sound of children's laughter and play. The Governor PERCENT BONDS. himself is fond of company, and nearly all the distinguished democratic politicians of the day | cheerfully gives. have drunk his rare Johannisberger (on which he really prides himself as a real wine connoisseur) at his hospitable board. Governor Tilden's wine cellar is truly famous, and contains some of the rarest and choicest old brands of wine—particularly Rhine wines—to be found Also MOTH PAPER, for putting under carpets. preserve its sparsling qualities, just received by in the country.—New York Herald.
